

Nate Howard is a passionate advocate for youth and the visionary founder of Movement BE, an initiative dedicated to empowering young voices through creativity and storytelling. He has made significant strides in helping youth articulate their experiences and aspirations, fostering resilience and self-empowerment.

Nate Howard's powerful storytelling abilities have led to impactful collaborations with artists like Kendrick Lamar, whose voice resonates with Nate's mission of empowering marginalized communities. Nate was featured on the song "LA," a project that earned him a gold plaque for his contribution and further spotlighted his talents through a feature on a Netflix series.

In 2021, Nate established the Movement BE Youth Center in San Diego, creating a safe haven where young people can access resources, mentorship, and a supportive community. Through after-school programs, summer initiatives, and an open mic series, Nate provides young people with a safe space to connect, express themselves, and develop their skills. His innovative ed-tech platform at movementbe.com equips young individuals with tools to tell their stories, ensuring their voices are heard in a digital landscape.

As the author of Tell Your Story Before They Do, Nate champions financial literacy and self-empowerment through the art of storytelling. His work extends beyond empowerment—it's about creating lasting impact by building communities where young people can thrive and reach their fullest potential.
